

With the 30th Division Boys At Fort Jackson

Fort Jackson, S. C., Feb. 26.—Here he is girls! Corp. James E. Mansfield, 24-year-old gunner corporal in the 115th Field Artillery regiment, who was chosen as the 30th infantry division's "best-looking soldier" in a contest with other Southern soldiers from the Carolinas, Georgia and Tennessee.

A resident of Sergeant York's home state, Corporal Mansfield is Tennessee's new claimant to soldierly fame. He is the son of H. D. Mansfield of Brownsville, Tenn.

Brown-haired and blue-eyed, the six-foot, 180 pound Tennessee soldier was almost the unanimous choice of a bevy of 15 Broadway chorus girls who served as judges for the contest here. The "judges" were members of the Hudson St. Clair dancing troupe which was featured in "The Beachcombers of 1942," a USO-Camps shows presentation which appeared here last week.

Corporal Mansfield not only conforms to female opinion of military qualifications but he's a "soldier's soldier" as well. He's a clean cut, well-built soldier with the military stance and bearing that stamps him as a typical example of Uncle Sam's "man in uniform."

Embryo Shave-tails.

Five enlisted men of the 30th division began a three months' course Tuesday at the armored force officers' candidate school at Fort Knox, Ky., that will qualify the successful candidates for commissions as second lieutenants in the officers' reserve corps.

Sgt. Jack F. Lansford and Sgt. Jack A. Bell, both of Athens, Tenn., are members of Tennessee's 117th infantry who are embryo "shave-tails." The other three officer candidates, all members of the 630th tank destroyer battalion, are Pvt. Frank P. Carr and Pvt. Louis P. Oppenheimer, both of Memphis, Tenn., and Pvt. David L. George of Whiteville, N. C.

New Judge Advocate

Announcement was made this week that Maj. Lawrence O. Case, former post judge advocate of Fort Jackson, has been transferred to the 30th infantry division as staff judge advocate to serve on the staff of Maj. Henry D. Russell, commander of the Old Hickory division.

The 30th's new staff judge advocate is a resident of Jacksonville, Fla., where he practiced law prior to reporting for active duty here on July 1, 1941. Major Case was commissioned a captain in the judge advocate general's department in 1936 and promoted to major on July 30, 1941, shortly after reporting for active duty.

One of Jacksonville's most prominent attorneys, Major Case was president of both the army and navy club of Jacksonville and the reserve officers' association. He was also a member of the board of directors of the Boy Scouts and president of the Jacksonville Little Theatre.

1 Southern Patriot

A man who served his country in Georgia's 121st Infantry regiment during the first world war is Fort Jackson's nominee for the nation's No. 1 patriot in this new conflict.

He's Bill Morris, Sr., a civilian employee at Fort Jackson, who took part in every battle in which Georgia's famed regiment engaged in France back in 1918. Of course, past records wouldn't qualify him as a 1942 patriot but there's no less than six other good reasons why he's entitled to that designation in this new war.

Those six reasons are five sons and one son-in-law who are now in the nation's armed services. His two older sons, Wynan, 20, and William, Jr., 25, are with General MacArthur's valiant forces in the Philippines. Another son, Tommy, 20, is attached to an aviation unit in New York State while the other two are seamen. Hyne, 23, serving in the merchant marine and Stoney, 18, with the U. S. navy. His only son-in-law, Cy Barter of Newport, R. I., joined the navy last week to make the Morrisses one of the nation's "fightingest families."

There's only one thing that irks 52-year-old Bill, Sr., however, and that's the fact that the army won't accept him for service. He's tried twice but was refused because of his age.
